
It's for the Birds

Birds are all around us, and they depend on us.

As a chapter of the National Audubon Society, we seek to bring people together to enjoy birds and other wildlife. We endeavor to create a culture of conservation in our community through education and advocacy, ultimately to benefit our feathered friends.

This includes:

- Advocating for protection of birds and their habitat by supporting local, state, national and hemispheric conservation priorities
- Offering birding field trips, identification classes and regional travel for the public
- Engaging children and adults in educational programs
- Coordinating outreach events including birding festivals and events
- Creating a bird friendly community by encouraging use of native plants
- Providing data on the health of local bird species through the Christmas Bird Count, the Great Backyard Bird Count, the winter shorebird survey, and other local monitoring projects

We can't do it without you! Are you a beginner? Great! Many of us are too. Do you love birds because they're great photo subjects? You'll find many members with a camera around their necks. Love birds but only watch them in your backyard garden? Some of us share your green thumb, and others are jealous! But we can all chat about the best birdseed. No matter how you came into the love of birds, you will find a home with us. Won't you join us this year?

Yours in birding,
